In this balancing exercise, and to the extent that his mandate will allow him, the mainstreaming of development agenda concepts into the WIPO institutional framework and programmatic work would be a critical responsibility of his office. Thus, despite many differences, even contradictions, among the countries of the South arising out of their different histories, geopolitical circumstances and varying levels of development, there is a greater sense of self-confidence and unity of purpose in the South than ever.

Corrective measures need to be taken both at the national and global levels, for which proper consultative mechanisms have to be established with the political leaders of the global South, as well as of Europe, Russia and Japan. Gatt, however, failed to cover many of the countries in the developing world.
Today, the political priorities were less about trade and more about the challenge of retraining workers as technology renders old jobs obsolete and transforms the world of work. These are opposed by another stratum that challenges the ruling orthodoxy, in his experiences as director of the South Centre, the intergovernmental think tank for the South, Yash Tandon challenges what he describes as the misdirected aid and development policies of the last 30 years.
