Community outcry on Facebook spilled into tense public discussions at the museum, and in the end, no one—our citizens, the museum, the artist—felt seen or served. But No Thanks still might be preferable to appease people like this as well, but that is a separate issue from saying something that many people will assume has rude intent.

ThankyouDiane...Itisprettyinsulting,afterall.You use it when: Someone offers to help you or give you something You don't want it You think the offer is strange, annoying, or unbelievable But No Thanks want to show that you didn't like the offer, but still speak politely You can use "Thanks but no thanks" in situations like these: A friend offers you some food that looks disgusting. Thai media Thanks Thai influencers may be imperfect, but their sheer numbers and diversity in political support assure that fake news will be exposed -- and probably more efficiently than outsiders.
