There was great danger that they would embrace that opinion, for experience has shown that it is a danger into which men are always prone to fall. The writer sees all Israelites, be they believers or non-believers, when addressing the "twelve tribes which are scattered abroad". It is evident that those to whom the Epistle was directed were, at that time, suffering in some form, or that they were called to pass through temptations, and that they needed counsel and support.
